Individual stone cottages with floor-to-ceiling windows and private verandahs are set around a hill, giving sweeping views over the Laikipia plains and Mt Kenya. Mugie Conservancy

A private wildlife conservancy in Laikipia covering almost 50,000 acres hosts an array of impactful community and conservation programs.

The Laikipia region of Kenya offers a real and pristine wilderness experience off the beaten track. The wildlife densities rank second to the Masai Mara, and more endangered species can be seen here than elsewhere in East Africa.

Located to the north of Nairobi and Mount Kenya, Laikipia is regarded as the gateway to Kenya's wild northern frontier district, where some of the country's most encouraging conservation success stories are unfolding. This region is at the forefront of ecotourism in Kenya, with cutting-edge community grazing programs and community empowerment projects, ensuring the survival of at-risk species whose populations are on the decline.

Securing land for wildlife is a crucial conservation imperative in Africa today, and Mugie Conservancy provides a key wildlife access route between the Laikipia plateau, the Mathews Range, and the Samburu lands to the north and east. Vast acacia-dotted savannahs, olive forests and scrubby bush are a haven to a multitude of wildlife in plentiful numbers, including key endemic northern Kenyan species such as Grevy's zebras, Jackson's hartebeests, beisa oryx and reticulated giraffes.

Mugie Conservancy is at the forefront of conservation, operating as a low-impact cattle ranch while preserving the delicate and productive ecosystems that host abundant wildlife. Cutting-edge community grazing programs and community empowerment projects through micro-economic assistance have encouraged engagement and investment from the local community in Mugie's conservation goals.
