

TINAJANI

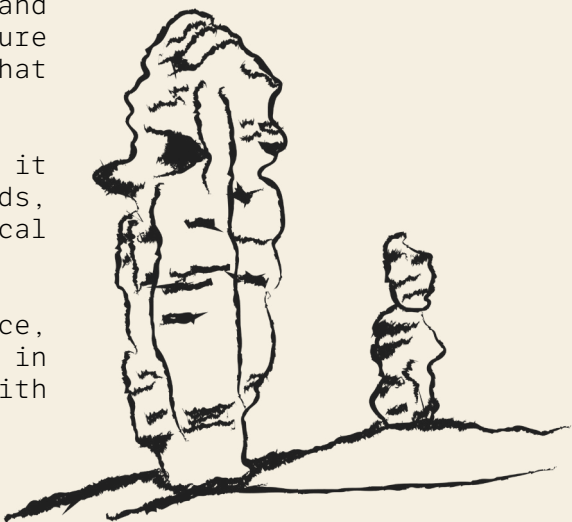

Factsheet

TINAJANI CANYON

Located along the route connecting Cusco, Puno, and the Colca Valley, Tinajani Canyon is a private nature reserve sculpted by the erosion of an ancient lake that once shaped the Altiplano.

Known as “The Canyon of the Guardians” legend has it that ancient giants were turned to stone by the gods, remaining forever as silent watchers of this mystical landscape.

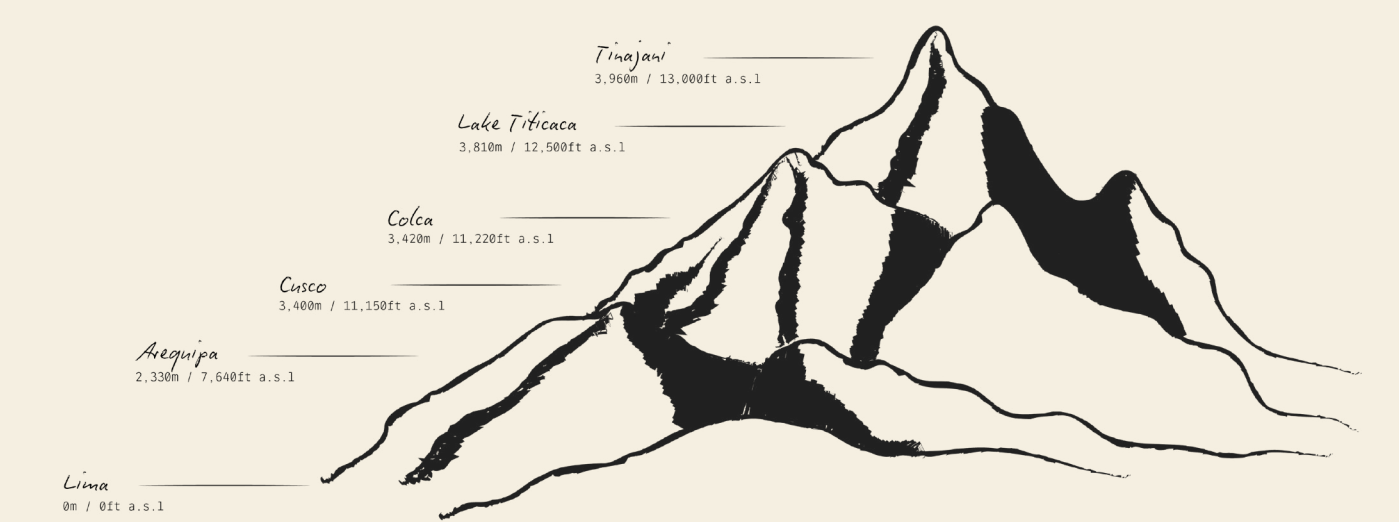

Rich in history, mythology, and culture, this place, with its almost otherworldly grandeur, immerses you in the majestic stillness of the Andes, leaving you with a profound sense of awe.

ALTITUDE & CLIMATE

Tinajani experiences two distinct seasons: the gold season (May to October) and the green season (November to April). At over 3,000m (9,842 ft) above sea level, its Andean climate remains cool and dry for much of the year. The gold season brings sunny days and crisp nights, while the green season sees occasional rains that transform the canyon into a lush oasis.

With clear skies and pure air, Tinajani is perfect for admiring its breathtaking landscapes and stargazing on serene nights.

FOOD CONCEPT

At Tinajani, every meal is a reflection of the Altiplano's way of life—wholesome, hearty, and deeply rooted in traditions. Our kitchen embraces the simplicity of rural cooking, where good ingredients take centre stage, prepared just as your local host would. Steaming bowls of Chairo and Pastel de Quinoa warm the soul, while wood-fired Cancacho and Huatia celebrate time-honoured techniques.

Mornings begin with Andean cereal crepes, oatmeal, and chapla bread, paired with a steaming cup of muña or Cedron tea. Afternoons bring comforting, nourishing dishes like slow-cooked stews and highland grains. As the sun sets, evenings invite you to gather around for a cosy fondue of Andean cheeses and local cuts of meat, best enjoyed with a glass of wine and the crisp highland air. To end on a sweet note, sip a warming cup of api and toqtoche or indulge in a homemade crumble.

EXPERIENCES

Our experiences are designed for those seeking to immerse themselves in the essence of this magical place, inviting them to explore unique landscapes and discover the local history, nature, and culture.

Tinajani offers around 400 acres of breathtaking terrain, where guests can uncover ancient caves and petroglyphs while connecting with the region's rich traditions. Activities range from guided hikes and storytelling at the site museum to meditation, Andean ceremonies, and unforgettable canyon sundowners.

Beyond Tinajani, explore towering Puya forests, cycle through Andean landscapes, visit historic cathedrals, and meet local artisans. Offered on an intimate shared basis, excursions are led by local interpreters who reveal the geography, culture, and mysticism of the land in Spanish or English.

Private vehicles facilitate exploration of nearby areas, with snacks, drinks, and picnic meals enhancing each adventure. Whether arriving from Cusco, PUQUIO, or Titilaka, your journey is enriched with cultural and natural wonders along the way.
