Smaller tributaries become less accessible, shifting the focus to the main waterways. Ideal for terrestrial explorations and wildlife spotting along the forest floor, where you may encounter capuchin monkeys, peccaries, and colourful birds like toucans and parrots, as well as smaller inhabitants including the pink-toed tarantula, poison dart frog, and various butterflies.	With rising water levels flooding the forest, the Peruvian Amazon transforms into a vast maze of waterways, perfect for exploration by skiff boat or kayak. More access to remote, hidden areas of the rainforest, providing a unique perspective. As you navigate these waterways, you'll encounter river-dwelling creatures like pink and grey river dolphins, caimans, and capybaras, as well as an array of bird species such as herons, kingfishers, and the elusive hoatzin.
