

Experiences for the day

Available from September 15, 2026 to May 15, 2027

Nibepo Aike is an estancia dedicated to rural tourism. Hereford cattle breeding is its main livestock activity, besides having a long history of sheep breeding. It is located within Los Glaciares National Park, 56 km from El Calafate. An estancia with more than 110 years of history, which is still run by the same family, pioneers who settled on the shores of the southern arm of Lake Argentino.

The estancia offers the opportunity to have a rural experience in a setting of mountains and glaciers. An immersion in the life of an authentic Patagonian estancia.

Ranch day program (Half day)

Departing from El Calafate at 8:30h along the unpaved Provincial Route 15, also known as “the road to the estancias”. Along the way it is common to come across condors, foxes and hares, with Cerro Frías taking centre stage. After crossing over the Río Rico, the landscape changes suddenly from the steppe-land to mountain scenery.

The estancia is reached after travelling along the edge of Lago Roca and having entered Los Glaciares National Park. The host guide welcomes you to the Estancia and takes you to the Quincho, a very spacious and cozy wooden and brick building, where you will be invited to have a hot drink (tea, coffee or mate) accompanied by home-made cakes and pastries. A good moment to pause and enjoy a magnificent view of the Andes mountain range.

The walk starts around the main building, the perfect example of a typical Patagonian estancia which was formerly devoted to sheep rearing and nowadays has become the most prestigious Hereford breeding ranch of these latitudes, while still retaining a small herd of sheep.

At the stables, those who have paid the extra to do a horse-ride will be given a mount and go out to explore the surroundings accompanied by a guide.

Meanwhile the rest of the group has a good long walk during which there are excellent views of the Southern Arm of Lago Argentino, discovering the diverse rocky outcrops eroded by glacial action and the changes of water level in the lake (due to the periodic closure of the way out by the Perito Moreno glacier and its subsequent breaking). The folds of the earth's crust can clearly be appreciated there, differentiated by the variety of sediments from which they originate. These formations continue until they reach a point where the rocks form a natural amphitheatre, creating quiet beaches of curious shapes.

The footpaths lead through native woodland of lenga and ñire, a habitat for caranchos, Austral parakeets, hares, woodpeckers, eagles and an abundant variety of native flora and fauna. The route may vary according to weather conditions.

After the walk or horse-ride, the group meets up again at the door of the shearing shed. This is a chance to see inside such a shed with all its skilled hands and understand the work of the shearing teams. The process is described from the shearing of the animal to the baling of the fleece, ready for the wool to be stored and transported. Manual shears are used for the shearing as they were on all the estancias until the appearance of the mechanical handle with cutting comb, a much faster and more practical system, although not so kind to the animal and does not give such a good cut.

Then a demonstration is given of horse handling skills, or according to the rural activities of the day, working with the herd in the corrals close to the main buildings. Between the daily activities the guest could also be able to participate at the morning of the cow milking and at the afternoon of the herding sheep, concluding therefore with a typical work day at the Estancia. These activities are subject to the weather conditions.

After the activities it is time to return to the Quincho where a whole lamb is being roasted on a vertical stake in traditional Patagonian fashion. During the short walk the guide tells some more stories and anecdotes of the place and the early settlers. Upon arrival at the Quincho the “Asado” (barbecue) is ready to delight the diners while enjoying the impressive view of the mountain range. On days with good weather, roasting can be done and served at tables set outside. Meanwhile the life of the estancia carries on and it is not uncommon to see the gauchos ride past herding the cattle and/or sheep and disappearing over the horizon.

Back in El Calafate, the experience of life on a typical Patagonian estancia will have given a fresh outlook on things, making more sense of the wide-open Patagonian landscapes characteristically stretching out into the remoteness of infinity.

Cristales horse ride

The ride starts from the corrals, heading west towards the Andes Mountain Range. To the left is the Cordón de los Cristales and to the right the southern arm of Lago Argentino. It is a horseback ride guided by a “baqueano” (local guide), who defines the route according to the weather and experience of the riders. The ride then continues south while contemplating an imposing scenery: Lake Argentino, the majestic Cervantes Hill with its eternal snow, the Perito Moreno and Adriana mountain ranges. The trail goes through forests of ñires and lengas. It is likely to find Hereford cattle grazing and horses at rest. During the tour you can see wildlife: condors, hares, foxes, woodpeckers, among others.
