

JACANA CAMP

Surrounded by seasonally flooded plains and papyrus swamps

Glide through the winding channels in a mokoro, spotting painted reed frogs, delicate water lilies, and perhaps even a surprise “Sundowner stop” hidden among the reeds. When water levels permit, venture further east by boat, exploring the Delta’s breathtaking landscapes.

Bird enthusiasts will be captivated by sightings of rare and remarkable species, including both the lesser and African jacana, Pel’s fishing owl, slaty egret, African pygmy goose, and many more. As night falls, gather around the campfire and share stories beneath a sky brimming with stars.

Nestled on an island in the Jao Reserve, Jacana Camp offers an immersive aquatic Okavango experience. Surrounded by seasonally flooded plains and papyrus swamps, this intimate retreat is best explored by water, while year-round game drives are available via game drive stations to nearby large islands.

ABOUT JACANA

As a predominantly water-based camp, Jacana offers a range of aquatic adventures, including boating, seasonal fishing, and mokoro safaris. For those seeking land-based exploration, year-round game drives provide opportunities to discover the diverse wildlife of this remarkable region.

Guests arrive at Jacana via the conveniently located Jao Airstrip, which provides direct access to the area. From there, it's just a short and scenic 30-minute transfer to camp, offering the perfect introduction to the surrounding wilderness.

WHERE WATER AND WILDLIFE WEAVE TOGETHER

Wake up to the sounds of the Delta and enjoy breakfast as elephants quietly move through the reeds in the distance. With the stillness of the water all around and bird calls echoing through the air, each day at Jacana begins with a sense of calm and connection to nature. Enjoy a leisurely brunch as red lechwe graze in the distance, and as evening falls, share dinner under a starlit sky while zebras wander nearby. Every meal at Jacana Camp is a feast for the senses.

Tucked away on a remote island in the seasonal floodplains of the Okavango Delta, Jacana Camp offers an intimate and authentic safari experience. With water all around in the flood season and the rich wildlife of the western Delta at your doorstep, it's a place where nature takes centre stage - and every moment is deeply felt.
